Tash,It's a "game changer" because everything that appears on Google Android-based phones seems to be free. While that's great for the consumer, the developers are left out in the cold. That's why they tend to flock to the iPhone App Store because they know their product will sell and provide them more revenue to produce more apps.This free, "open" approach Google has begun will fall flat eventually because not all developers and companies are as rich as Google and they can't afford to offer their hard work for "free". Until Google can convince developers to make their apps Android as well as iOS based, then the App Store will always remain the and nothing truly game changing or innovative will ever take the masses by storm on the Android Marketplace. This will be made certain of once Verizon debuts their version of the iPhone in 2011 and everyone makes a mass exodus from Android handsets. Because the iPhone, no matter how derided, criticized and hated, is still the de facto phone which all others are either compared to or based upon. It's just starting to get good. Wait, watch and see! avi to dvd burner We can already call on IPAD 3G with pipe and Skype, and text and send photos with text + without jailbreak required. It's great that these two apps for emergencies, but it's hard believe iPad carry in my pocket for everyday stuff.
